

Attachment Lead in Schools Training

Understanding how to support adopted, fostered & vulnerable pupils to settle and learn

Presented by Louise Michelle Bomber
Accredited by the University of Brighton

This 7 day modular training course has been developed to enable school staff themselves to become Attachment Leads in their schools and local authorities. The course is for those determined to provide alternative practices to enable all pupils to be fully included in school, making the most of all the educative opportunities on offer. The course is rooted in attachment awareness and trauma informed practices. By attending to the attachment systems of individual pupils, these pupils can settle to learn. This course will be based on the latest findings around interventions to support those affected by developmental trauma, loss and insecurity of attachment. The course will complement the book 'Settling troubled pupils to learn: Why relationships matter in school' co-authored by Louise Michelle Bomber and Dan Hughes. The course will enable staff to identify and assess the need for alternative, additional support in school and to set up integrative support plans for individual pupils over 2-3 years.

Suitable for

Aimed primarily at both education support staff (TAs/Mentors) and their Senior Managers (INCOs, SENCOs, Assistant Heads) who are determined to include pupils in their schools who are vulnerable, a cause for concern, in need, at risk, in care, on special guardianships or adopted. However Virtual School Head teachers, the Virtual School team and various behaviour outreach services and Educational Psychologists have also participated as part of their doctorates at Queens University in Belfast. Those who have recently gained Attachment Lead status are listed on the following website: www.attachmentleadnetwork.net
